Gang injunction: who decides who's in a gang?

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Last month, a judge approved an injunction against members of the "Broderick Boys" in West Sacramento. The injunction was championed by the office of Yolo County District Attorney Jeff Reisig, with the approval of the city's police and elected officials.

The injunction restricts the activities of validated gang members inside much of the city's north area – in some cases, preventing these citizens from doing things that would otherwise be Constitutionally-protected activities -- for instance, associating in public with individuals of their own choice.

For instance, gang members are prohibited from being on public property or in an establishment open to the public between 10 p.m. and 6 a.m. each night (with some exceptions, such as attendance at a church or school event, or an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting). They also can't associate with other gang members in public (with some exceptions). And they face enhanced penalties for some crimes.

The injunction is against "validated" gang members – but who decides who is and isn't a gang member? Some citizens have expressed concern that the injunction will be used to target Latinos, since the Broderick Boys are a Latino-affiliated gang. They've worried that police and the D.A.'s office will be too quick to add people to the list and cover them by the rules of the seven-year injunction.

The News-Ledger asked Jonathan Raven, Assistant Chief Deputy District Attorney, to explain how people get onto that list, and how they can get off it. Raven responded in a pair of emails.

"The determination of gang membership is a multi-tiered process made by the police department, in which validation factors are reported from patrol officers, they are gathered by the gang unit and reviewed by an expert," said Raven. "The expert's determination that one meets sufficient validation criteria is then reviewed by the unit sergeant, and further reviewed by a lieutenant (I think) and ultimately signed off on by the chief or deputy chief."

The criteria are spelled out in the actual injunction. They include the admission of gang membership, information from an informant, the presence of gang-related tattoos, or "being arrested while participating with active members of the Broderick Boys." Such criteria are "factors" in determining if a person is a member of the Broderick Boys gang, according to the injunction.

Race isn't mentioned as a criterion. A person's clothing and personal associations are "relevant" but not enough to earn the label of a gang member.

Essentially, the decision is made by local police.

"Court action is not required," he continued. "One can be removed from the Injunction Enforcement list by meeting certain criteria (be-

First year of legalized fireworks in West Sac

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

West Sacramento made it through July 4 without any major problems, reports the city fire department. This is the first Independence Day holiday season for which the city has legalized the sale and use of "safe and sane" fireworks.

"We had a pretty good weekend," said Division Chief John Heilmann of the West Sacramento Fire Department on Tuesday morning. "On the fourth, we had no incidents directly related to the safe and sane fireworks. It seems to have been a success."

You may not have heard your last legal or illegal "boom." Citizens can legally use these fireworks up until noon today, although sales from firework booths were shut down on the night of the 4th of July. Those parameters were set by a new city ordinance.

How noisy was it, and how many complaints came in?

"It was about the same" as previous years, said Heilmann.

A certain portion of the public has set off fireworks during Fourth of July celebrations every year even when they weren't legal.

For its first foray into legalization of "safe and sane" fireworks, West Sacramento held a lottery and picked eight schools, churches and nonprofits to receive a permit to open a local fireworks booth as a fundraising event. The groups each aligned themselves with one of the two major fireworks wholesalers who helped them through the process of setting up and stocking a sales booth. The booths went up in commercial parking lots around town on June 28, the first day they were allowed to open.

The News-Ledger paid a call to the fireworks booth in the Nugget parking lot on Saturday morning. The booth was staffed by partners from the Broderick & Bryte Community Action Committee (BBCAN), the West Sacramento Historical Society and Sactown Heroes youth organization.

How were sales?

"There's a split between the three of us (partner organizations)," reported Jim Brewer of BBCAN. "Phantom (the wholesaler) has a business plan for setting up these stands, and we're falling within that sales curve. We're looking to split between $1,500 and $2,000. What makes us particularly happy is we're working with these partners."

Mike Francesconi, Jim Brewer, Patrice Alvarez and Shelley Koonse volunteer their time selling "Funky Monkey" and other fireworks specialties to raise money for charity (News-Ledger photos)

Like the other local charity booths, their booth was selling "safe and sane" fireworks okayed by the state fire marshal.

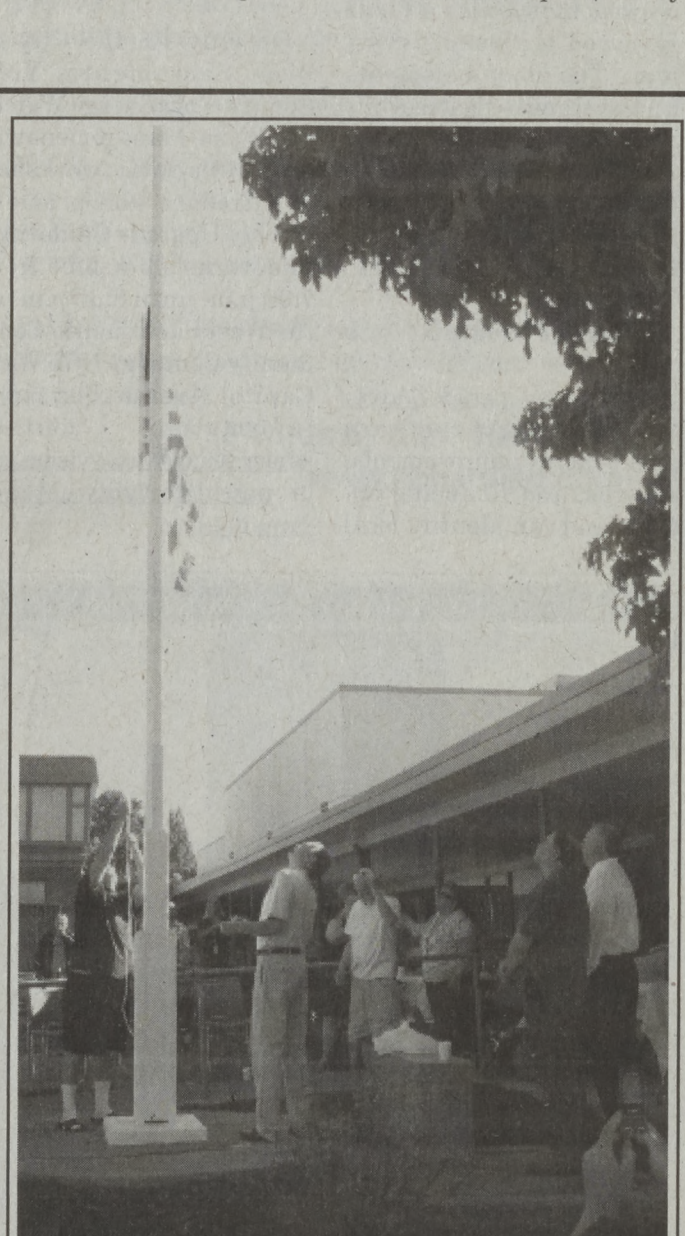
What was "hot," so to speak, in terms of fireworks sales?

"The 'Komodo 3000' has been very popular, said Mike Francesconi of BBCAN. "It's probably the largest 'fountain.' Another is called the 'Funky Monkey.'"

Some of the wares on the shelf in the fireworks booth. This booth in the Southport Town Center parking lot was operated by a coalition of local charities

Handheld sparklers like the "Morning Glory" are still popular, as are "smokeballs" and "crackballs," he said. The latter make a popping noise, evidently.

Barring a change to the city ordinances, there will be no legal household use of fireworks in town again until close to next July 4 – although some scofflaws will no doubt set off a few illegal poppers on New Year's Eve.



Old Glory restored

The flag at the Yolo County Housing Authority's housing complex for seniors was tattered, and the flagpole was in bad repair.

Members of the Bryte & Broderick Community Action Network (BBCAN) worked with the housing authority to get the flagpole fixed and painted. The Yolo County Veterans Service Office donated a new flag.

And the new 'stars and stripes' went up in a small ceremony on Thursday morning.

Residents have take responsible to form a committee to raise and lower the flag and take care of the flag and pole.

State revenue shift will cut services to young Yolo Co. kids, reports First 5 Yolo

First 5 Yolo announced it will cut programs and services in reaction to the state's budget troubles.

California Assembly Bill 99 will reapportion $1 billion from statewide "First 5" agencies to the state to help balance the budget, the local group reported. Yolo's "First 5" agency has cut its internal budget by $167,000 per year and will also reduce funding for programs and outreach.

First 5 organizations were set up to use tobacco tax money to fund programs for children in their first five years of life.

The programs to be affected by the cuts to First 5 Yolo beginning on July 1 include health insurance outreach and enrollment, home visits to at-risk first-time mothers, early learning and parent support programs, oral health and nutrition programs, perinatal substance abuse treatment and child care quality enhancement programs, said a First 5 Yolo spokesperson.

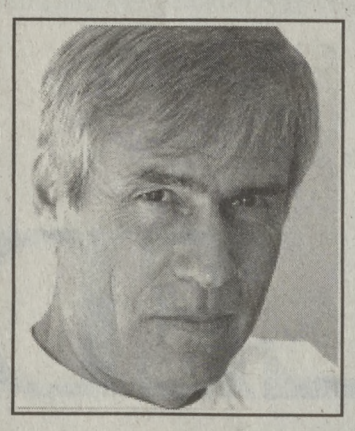
The group often works with other agencies and nonprofits.

Said executive director Julie Gallelo in a press release:

"First 5 Yolo and our funded partners are facing significant changes as we adjust to the reality of new budgets and reduced resources. "However, our funded partners continue to work hard, to collaborate more and to figure out how to do more with less. We are lucky to have such amazing partners in Yolo County."

The real meaning of Independence Day

My Back Pages



By Daryl Fisher

As I write this, another Independence Day has just come and gone, with its fireworks, family barbecues, small town parades, and the flying of American flags in front of neighborhood houses. Maybe it's just me, but for some reason, each passing year seems to bring smaller fireworks displays, a reduced number of family gatherings, and not so many flags blowing gently back and forth in the hot summer breeze.

John Adams, one of this country's founding fathers, once said these words about Independence Day: "It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward forevermore."

Those celebrations once included such wonderful things as baking contests, father and son gunny sack races, band concerts, leisurely baseball games, firecrackers that were still legal to tote around in your pocket, the swearing in of new citizens, and after-sundown dances where Americans of all ages could get together to spark and court.

I guess you really can't blame the citizens of this great nation for being a little less than thrilled about where they find themselves on our 235th birthday. Everywhere one looks there seems to be nothing but trouble and hard times. We are still fighting two wars (at least our volunteer soldiers and their families are fighting them), our economy has yet to fully recover from the greedy among us having almost destroyed the capitalistic system that controls our financial well-being, and Mother Nature seems to have decided that this is the perfect time to visit us with seemingly endless natural disasters from sea to shining sea. But having acknowledged all that, it seems to me that the 4 th of July is still the perfect time for Americans everywhere to remember that we are some of the most blessed people on the face of the earth, and this year, it took a bright and brave pen pal from halfway across the world to remind me of it.

Her name is Leah, and she and her husband, Paul, along with their three children, live in a Russian city of about 200,000 on the Volga River. Paul is an artist and they met while Leah was a tour guide at the world famous Hermitage in St. Petersburg, where she worked for awhile after she had finished her studies in art history. Now she manages a studio where she and her husband and a few employees make handmade designer toys to sell both locally and abroad.

"Very few Americans really understand Russia," Leah explained to me in an email. "You know us through our classical Russian literature, or from our troubled relationship with you during the Cold War. But to really understand today's Russia, you have to know our history. For centuries maybe one percent of our people were educated, and the Russian nobility was our only layer of culture. There was never any freedom, and with the coming of communism, that only got worse. All they cared about was that the revolution not be threatened, and many of our best people were either killed or sent off to die in camps. And hanging over everyone was the constant fear that things would only get worse. The belief in our future was killed and our confidence destroyed. We became a passive people without the belief that we could do something in life for ourselves. It is hard to become a free people when you have no reason to believe it is possible."

Leah went on to say, "We have a lot of human rights violations here. For example, sometimes wages earned are still not paid, yet everyone is silent for fear of losing their jobs altogether. Many work without contracts and are deprived of any social assistance. In the provinces, the average salary is $200 per month, and you cannot live on that. Even those who have a good job and

Local workshop July 13: how to use rebates & other tools to add energy-efficiency to your home

West Sacramento homeowners can save money while creating jobs through Energy Upgrade California, the State's new energy efficiency program. Californians can take advantage of low-interest lows and receive up to $4,000 in rebates, incentives and tax credits by improving their home's energy efficiency.

Energy Upgrade California emphasizes a "whole house" approach, in which a home is viewed as a complete system. The home's elements and systems—heating, air conditioning and water, as well as structural features like windows, air ducts, and insulation—are evaluated to see how well they are working together.

Using the program's web portal, www.EnergyUpgradeCA.org, property owners can learn about energy improvements, rebates, and financing options and can identify local participating contractors. One financing option is a Residential Energy Retrofit Program loan through CHF (California Rural Home Mortgage Finance Authority).CHF financing for energy-efficiency upgrades is available to Yolo County residents at a 3% fixed interest rate, fully amortized over 15 years, with no maximum or minimum on the loan amount.

On July 13, the City of West Sacramento, Yolo County, Yolo Energy Watch, and Waste Management will host a free public workshop to introduce and promote Energy Upgrade California. The workshop will be from 7:00 p.m. until 8:30 p.m. at the West Sacramento Community Center at 1075 West Capitol Avenue.For more information, contact jenifer.segar@valleyvision.org or pauld@cityofwestsacramento.org.

Tie game earns a playoff spot

The Sacramento Gold semi-pro soccer team met the Sonoma County Sol on Sunday on the Gold's home field at River City High.

The two teams fought to a 1-1 tie -- an outcome good enough to send the Gold on to the playoffs next weekend. The Gold did not earn home field advantage, though. They will go to San Diego to play the Flash in the first round of the Western Division's playoffs.

make $500-$700 a month are in a constant state of insecurity. They fear that after retirement they will become beggars. Therefore our young people are immigrating in mass – over 2.5 million in the last two years – to places like Canada and Australia and New Zealand and America. And they are our most educated people. As for our government, everyone knows the elections are rigged. Everything is still centralized, so all the taxes flow to Moscow where the life is good. Corruption and bribes are everywhere. Police are not working as they should. For instance, at our old apartment, neighbors were selling counterfeit vodka to alcoholics. When we wrote a statement to the police we were told `If you want to live, sit quietly'."

Leah concluded her email by saying, "I don't think Americans understand how lucky they are. Your freedoms are protected by laws and honest courts while in many of our towns, if you really want to get justice, you have to hire a gangster to go out and do it for you. And in our bigger cities like Moscow, if a journalist or even a simple citizen tries to take on the powers that control the country, they are often killed, and no one is ever captured and brought to justice for those kinds of crimes. So our sense of freedom is so different from yours. You have had many centuries to get things right, and we are just starting out, and in my opinion it will be another hundred years before the greatness of the Russian people will start to be realized. Don't get me wrong, there are many wonderful things about my people and my country, but the one thing we really need is the one thing you already have – true freedom."

So, with another 4th of July having come and gone, Leah's words are still ringing in my head, and it was good to be reminded in such an insightful and unexpected way that I am a truly free man, living in a truly free country, and that I should never take that wonderful fact for granted.

If a person believes they have wrongly been added to the list by the police, what can he or she do about it?

"The person must first contact the police department, which has initial authority to add or remove someone from the list," Raven answered. "Next, the person may contact the District Attorney and ask for an independent review of the police department's decision. Finally, the person may file a motion in Yolo Superior Court asking the court to order them removed from the list."

OPINION

NEWS-LEDGER EDITORIAL:

Producing a wax-free newspaper

If all goes well, this issue of the News-Ledger will be the first in its 47-year history to make do without the use of melted wax.

Decades ago, it was standard among newspapers to have a row of "light tables" in a production room, staffed by usually-female employees known as "paste-up ladies." The table-tops would be glass, and they'd be lit from underneath, making it easy to see through a few layers of paper and keep track of the light-blue guide lines on each master newspaper page.

The paste-up pros (in most newspapers, it would be specialized female staffers) would "cut and paste" columns of newsprint, stock graphics, and other items onto the master page. They'd coat the back of each of these elements with melted wax dispensed through a wax-melting machine with a roller on it. They'd stick it to the master page, aligning and straightening each detail by eye.

At the News-Ledger, this process would be a team effort done under the pressure of a looming deadline.

Ads would be layed out the same way. You might pull off the little picture of the plucked chicken from last week's grocery store ad, and plop down a small picture of a steak to represent this week's special at the market. Using wax let you put down, pull up or adjust the position of all these little components of a newspaper page until you got it right.

When the page was ready, it would go off to the printer, where it would head into a room with a special large camera. The camera would take a picture of the page and produce a film negative. The camera would pick up the odd mark that wasn't supposed to be on the page – a bit of shadow where one paper item overlaps another, a smudge of excess wax. Somebody in the press room would examine the film and try to mark out these flaws with a pen. The film would be used to produce a printing plate, and the plate would be hung on the press. All this was a great improvement over previous printing methods, which involved such dead arts as the ability to pick up individual metal pieces of type (like the letter "k") and line them up backwards in columns so they could be used to directly print a newspaper page.

Several decades ago, newspapers began to use primitive computers to produce some of the columns of type needed for a printed newspaper. One technique involved running out strips of undeveloped paper which then was washed through an ammonia solution to reveal the printed word. The strips of type were then trimmed with scissors before heading off to the paste-up ladies.

By about the 1990s, most papers had at least begun to do something different, called "pagination." Using desktop publishing software, they started handling everything – ads, photos, type – on the computer screen. There was no longer a dummy newspaper page, unless you wanted to print one out to "proof" the work. Everything went straight from the computer to the printing plate.

Truth be told, the News-Ledger is rarely ahead of the curve with regards to technology. Most of the newspaper's pages were converted to "pagination" some years ago, but some (like our classified ad page) remained to be produced using printed type that was waxed and stuck onto those dummy sheets with their blue grids up until last week.

With this issue, for the first time, that's no longer the case. This week's issue went straight from the computer screen to the printing plates. No wax, no scissors, no big blank page with its blue guidelines.

The result should be cleaner-looking pages with crisper alignment than before, greater flexibility of layout, and perhaps some labor savings.

The world moves on. The old printer Gutenberg would be astounded.

What's next? We'll talk more about that later. But the next year looks like it will be a good one for the ol' News-Ledger, with more to offer you both in print and online.

In the meantime, anybody have a use for an old make-up table?

The New York Times magazine on Sunday printed an article called "California's Next Nightmare," with an overview of the dangers of a catastrophic flood in the Sacramento region. The sub-headline was "How a failing levee system could turn Sacramento into a modern-day Atlantis."

West Sacramento is working to make its levees among the best in the region, but still, it faces a lot of the same dangers. This city was pictured in the magazine article near the center of the illustration of the imperiled region.

The danger of a major flood isn't news to many people who live here, although many of them probably underestimate that risk, and will probably continue to do so right up until the day their living room fills with water. Homes and businesses need to continue to keep talking about the danger, and doing what they can do mitigate the dangers.

1. Public Hearing Regarding Appeal of the Planning Commission's Approval of West Coast Recycling Group Environmental Impact Report and Conditional Use Permit (CUP 10-7)

West Coast Recycling Group (WCRG) proposes to develop approximately 15 acres at the Port of West Sacramento in the City of West Sacramento to construct and operate a scrap metal shredding and recycling facility. The project site is on formerly used industrial land located at 3125 Industrial Boulevard. The project site is located in the northwestern portion of the Port facility. Operations at the proposed facility would include scrap metal sorting and scrap metal shredding and material separation and processing to extract usable material. The vehicles that are to be shredded on-site will already have been dismantled by other companies to remove vehicle fluids, tires, batteries, and reusable parts. The facility would employ emission controls and an industrial stormwater system to capture and reuse rainwater. A draft Environmental Impact Report/Statement has been prepared for the project. The idea of Go Figure is to arrive at the figures given at the bottom and right-hand columns of the diagram by following the arithmetic signs in the order they are given (that is, from left to right and top to bottom). Use only the numbers below the diagram to complete its blank squares and use each of the nine numbers only once.

COUCH THEATER DVD PREVIEWS
BY SAM STRUCKHOFF

By Sam Struckhoff

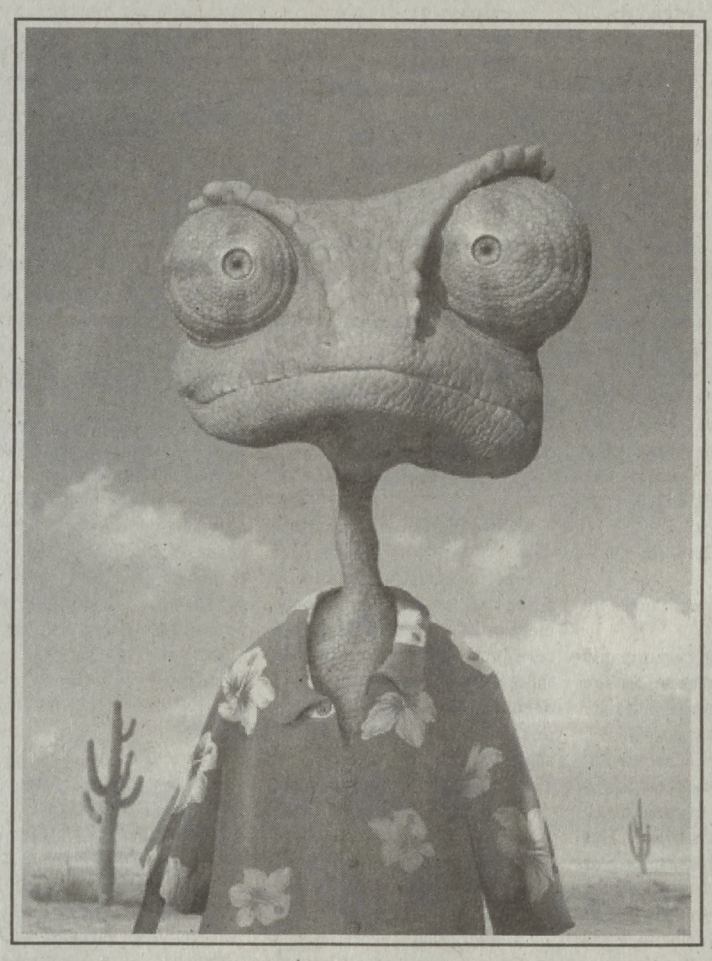
EDITOR'S NOTE: DVDs reviewed in this column will be available in stores the week of July 11, 2011.

PICKS OF THE WEEK

"Rango" (PG) — One of the wonderful things to take shape since the rise of computer-animated kids movies is the notion that adults often must sit through and appear to enjoy the show as well. "Rango" takes control of this idea in an interesting way. Not many kids movies work in references to "Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas" or "Chinatown."

"Rango" tells the story of a neurotic pet chameleon dropped into the Wild West. Johnny Depp does a good job giving voice to the scrawny green hero, and actually gives some depth to the lizard's shaky bravado. In fact, all of the characters look and sound interesting — something I didn't think possible considering the steady cascade of talking CG animals that's been coming out of Hollywood year after year. The action, visuals, jokes and scruffy little animals rank high among what the genre has to offer.

Like the little town housing the characters, the whole movie seems crafted out of little pieces of other, more recognizable efforts. This also might be the movie's largest drawback. While grownups can appreciate the little homages, many of Rango's quips could go right over the heads of younger viewers. The movie's attention to detail makes for a well-crafted animated adventure that nobody is too big to enjoy.



'RANGO'

"Arthur" (PG-13) — This remake of the 1981 bumbling-drunk comedy of the same name just doesn't have the same kick. The story brings back Arthur Bach, a billionaire playboy manchild who receives an ultimatum: settle down and get married or say goodbye to the money.

The idea was to create a vehicle for Russell Brand, a capable English comedian who just can't seem to fit into the whole leading-man role. Not that he can't play a pithy party-animal Englishman — you may remember him playing such a role in "Forgetting Sarah Marshall" and "Get Him to the Greek" — but Brand's quips and comedy-mugs can't hold up for a whole movie.

There may be a few giggles here and there, if only from errant pieces of Brand's charm slipping out of the sanitary container of the movie. If you're interested in the comedic stylings of Russell Brand, there are better examples elsewhere. Likewise, anyone who likes witty inebriated Brits named Arthur can find a better specimen, one from 30 years ago.

"Brazil" (R) [Blu-ray] — This 1985 absurdist science-fiction film is one of those movies the creator fought for, and watching it shows why. Set in a dismal future ruled by heartless bureaucracy and inefficiency, a government worker starts to see through the elaborate mess of the world around him.

Directed by Terry Gilliam, the movie shows a world so dystopian and ridiculous, it's George Orwell as read by Monty Python. "Brazil" is easily a Blu-ray worthy movie; you wouldn't want to miss how the pointless complexity and overbearing absurdity of future society is shown through carefully placed visual nuances.

"The Murder of the Century: The Gilded Age Crime That Scandalized a City and Sparked the Tabloid Wars"
by Paul Collins
(Crown, $26)
Reviewed by Larry Cox

It isn't easy to blow the dust off a century-old murder and keep it as exciting, engaging and relevant as when the crime first occurred. Writer Paul Collins has done just that, reporting the details of a ghastly Victorian murder that was nothing short of sensational.

On the afternoon of June 26, 1897, two boys playing near a pier on the Lower East Side of New York discovered what turned out to be the floating torso of a man wrapped in oilcloth. Later, berry pickers near Harlem stumbled upon neatly severed limbs in an overgrown ditch, while on Long Island, a farmer was startled to find that his duck pond had turned red with blood.

Police were baffled, since the head was missing and there appeared to be no witnesses, no motives, no positive identification and no suspects. The only real clue was the oilcloth used to wrap the various body parts. It was such a gaudy pattern that few pieces had been sold, and police were able to connect the dots back to a woman involved in a lurid love triangle that eventually led to one of the most riveting trials New York had ever seen.

As Collins explains, it was a complex murder. The victim had been lured from Manhattan, murdered in Queens and then had his body parts scattered over three boroughs. As competing newspaper moguls Joseph Pulitzer and William Randolph Hearst helped turn the murder into a media circus, the combined efforts of an eccentric professor, an anxious cop and a cub reporter finally helped crack the case.

By deftly putting the characters, the event and the festering underbelly of the Gilded Age into historical context, Collins has produced one of the most exciting true-crime books of the summer.

Fruit Preserves With a Twist

Summer is the season for a variety of beautiful fruits at great prices. If you've purchased more than you can possibly eat, the best thing to do is to preserve the rest. A great way to preserve extra fruit or fruit with bumps, bruises or knots is to make fruit leather.

Fruit leathers, sometimes referred to as fruit roll-ups, are believed to have first been developed in the Middle East. Fresh fruit was cooked and mashed. Then the puree was poured onto muslin cloth and put through a process that allowed the fruit to dry in a thin sheet. The result was a preserved fruit that when dried has a "leathery" appearance that is firm to the touch and lasts a long time. The finished product was cut into shapes and placed into jar for storage.

Fruit leather does not require refrigeration and is the perfect snack for long trips. Making your own fruit leather allows you to preserve the fruits of summer and avoid the preservatives or added sugars found in commercially packaged fruit roll-ups.

The National Center for Home Food Preservation at University of Georgia Cooperative Extension has helpful directions for making homemade fruit leather:

1. Use 2 cups of fruit for each 13- by 15-inch fruit leather. Select ripe or slightly overripe fruit, and wash it in cool water. Remove and discard the peel, seeds and stems. Cut the fruit into chunks. Puree the fruit until smooth in a food processor or blender.

2. Add 1/4 cup of unsweetened fruit juice or 2 teaspoons of lemon juice for each 2 cups fruit to prevent darkening.

3. Preheat oven to 140 F. Line a 13- by 15-inch baking pan with rimmed sides or 2 small baking sheets with rimmed sides with food-safe plastic wrap, being careful to smooth out wrinkles. Do not use waxed paper or aluminum foil.

4. Spread the pureed fruit evenly, using a spatula, until about 1/8-inch thick on the prepared baking pan. Avoid pouring puree too close to the edges of the pan to make it easier to remove.

5. Drying time in an oven is about 6 to 8 hours, depending on the size of the pans used. Larger fruit leathers take longer to dry.

NOTE: Fruit leather dries from the outside edge toward the center. Test for dryness by touching the center of the fruit leather. No indentation should be evident if the fruit leather is completely dry.

6. When dry and while still warm, peel the fruit leather from the plastic and roll it into a log. Allow the fruit leather to cool, slice it into sections, and rewrap the rolls in plastic to keep it fresh. Cookie cutters can be used to cut out shapes that children will enjoy. Store the cut-out shapes in an airtight, resealable plastic bag.

Fruit leather will keep up to one month at room temperature. For storage up to one year, place tightly wrapped rolls in the freezer.
